For fifty years a 26-foot tall torii, or Japanese gate, a gift from the Seattle Japanese Chamber of Commerce to the city of Seattle in 1934, stood at the entrance to Seward Park until it was removed due to age in the mid-1980s.

Now community members, led by Friends of Seward Park, are inviting the public to help design a replacement for the former neighborhood icon that will honor its predecessor and reflect current community values.

Public meetings will gather community input on the design and placement of the torii.
The Friends will then seek additional grants and raise funds to rebuild the torii.
